

A 35-year-old male presents with heartburn, regurgitation, and a sour taste in his mouth, especially after meals. The patient has been self-medicating with over-the-counter antacids, but the symptoms persist. A 24-hour pH monitoring test confirms the diagnosis of GERD. The patient is started on a PPI and advised to avoid trigger foods.